Let Us Describe These Rockers In Detail!

The illustration shows them identically as they appear on sales floors. The illustration was made from photographic blue prints, but no picture could possibly portray the wonderful quality of the imitation leather fabrics with which these rockers are upholstered. Imitation leather in this particular case does not suggest inferiority, but denotes superiority! By that we mean it is superior to many genuine leather upholsterings. Its wearing quality is excellent. It was subjected to the most rigid test and will withstand the greatest strain. And as for appearance, it so closely resembles the genuine that you must closely scrutinize it before you can tell the difference.

LUNGS PUNCTURED,
BOYS SWELLS TWICE
HIS NORMAL SIZE

New York, Sept. 15.—Many surgeons were interested in an operation performed yesterday in the Washington Heights Hospital, which it is believed will save the life of Max Fader, 13 years old, of No. 449 West 163d street. Max was run over by an automobile on Monday, and the four ribs that were broken punctured the lungs. Soon after the boy reached the hospital it was apparent that he was able to inhale normally, but in exhaling the air passed from the lungs into the subcutaneous tissues. This air spread and accumulated under the skin all over the body and head. The boy became twice his normal size, his chin and chest touched and his skin was stretched almost as tight as the head of a drum. Surgeons throughout the city soon heard of the rare case, known as emphysema, and many of them went to the hospital to observe and study it. The air exhaled from the lungs into the subcutaneous tissues began yesterday to exert such a pressure on the wind pipe that it was feared the boy would choke to death and Dr. Clarence Sichel, consulting surgeon at the hospital, decided to perform an operation. It was the last resort, and last night at the hospital it was said it probably would save the boy's life. He recovered from the operation quickly and soon was breathing more normally.
